BEING A HUMANITARIAN WORKER MEANS A LOT

"I'm Butrus Olay I work as community worker for Widows and Orphans charitable Organization (WOCO) in Fashoda County, I have joined the humanitarian world since 2015. To me "Being a Humanitarian worker means a lot, it requires you to be there always in time of need to help alleviate human suffering, save lives anytime and anywhere.

The humanitarian work requires being responsible and conscious of the circumstances of other people's lives

It requires you to respond and support the vulnerable people on the basis of need without discrimination. I'm happy to have a job that reflects my values and what I believe in. Working with the disadvantage people requires integrity, self-discipline, independence and neutrality

Since I joined Kaya online learning platform I witnessed changes in term of behaviors skills and knowledge. I'm able to execute my duties as required. I have leant a lot from the core humanitarian standard course completed on Kaya and now I am able to apply what I have learnt in my daily activities. I believe that changing people's life positively and supporting them to come out from darkness to light will inspire them to face life and be stronger. I'm there to help my community identify their opportunities and challenges, help them to believe in themselves, and look for sustainable answers for real change The favorite part of my work is the Fact That it is all about tangible human interaction. do a better job if I can relate to or understand what makes the community I'm serving feel comfortable and satisfied, what aspirations they have and how they foresee their future. It is not easy, it requires one to deny himself and carry his cross. it requires one to seek solution and advocate on behalf of the affected community."
